

Food Network for Ethical Trade Country Risk rating

The Food Network for Ethical Trade (FNET) exists to support our members in identifying, prioritising and facilitating collective action on systemic human rights issues. As outlined in our Theory of Change we encourage businesses to adopt common practical tools and approaches to reduce duplication and accelerate supply chain adoption. One of the shared tools within the membership is our common risk assessment tool which supports members to have a common understanding of country and ingredient risk. To make it easier for supply chain actors to see the country risk score is common between members we are making FNET country risk rating scores public.

The FNET Country Risk rating uses publicly available information on country risks and known-human rights risk drawn from public sources and best practice to produce a low, medium or high risk score which is intended to inform a company's ethical trade risk assessment. The FNET full Risk Assessment tool combines the country risk rating with risks associated with labour types and industries to provide a common understanding of ingredient/raw material risk. The tool encourages companies to enter commercial information against which to assess their ethical trade risks in order to be able to prioritise the resources they have for managing ethical trade and identify appropriate additional due diligence requirements. If you want to learn more about the full risk assessment tool, please contact admin@foodnetworkforethicaltrade.com who can also share further details on wider membership benefits.
